

8-Feb-17 Putin's Tough Choice, or the US's Tough Choice?

Description

Remember the posting of the other day? "In conclusion, what Trump represents is the awareness, finally, in the US, that Russia is not there for the taking and a very hefty price would have to be paid to get half of Russia's support. " Very interesting article in Zero Hedge: Putin's Tough Choice: China Or The West.

Will he, or won't he?

From the article: "Foreshadowing all of this was a news leak late last year in Germany's Bild Zeitung, that Kissinger has drafted a plan to officially recognize Crimea as part of Russia and lift the Obama administration's economic sanctions."

Of course, the Russians will not be seduced by a man in his last hours, I mean Kissinger, but we should not lose sight of such real politics. Otherwise, how to explain this: Henry Kissinger becomes member of Russian Academy of Sciences

The US is in disarray, it is in conflict with itself and with everyone else. This is the gruesome spectacle of a dying elephant. Try not to get hurt.
