

'No Place' for Sovereign Russia in Western Mindset

Description

The secretary of Russia's national security council has lashed out at the West, pointing to their habit of creating global threats, including numerous terrorist groups, in pursuit of their interests.

Nikolay Patrushev also claimed, in an interview published by news outlet Argumenti i Fakti, that Washington's decision to withdraw troops from Afghanistan was a prelude to NATO's proxy war against Russia in Ukraine.

"The events in Ukraine are not a confrontation between Moscow and Kiev. It's a military confrontation of NATO – the US and England first and foremost – with Russia," the top security official said in a newspaper interview. "They fear a direct standoff, so NATO instructors push Ukrainian guys toward their certain deaths."

Patrushev argued that, while Western nations claim to be "defending civilization against barbarism" in Ukraine, they are actually motivated by selfish interests and won't "save any lives at the expense of their enrichment and ambitions."

He said there is an established pattern of the US creating threats that it later ostensibly fights against, he continued, citing terrorist organizations Al-Qaeda, the Taliban and Islamic State (IS, formerly ISIS) as examples. Washington may occasionally show off the killing of individual terrorist leaders like Osama Bin Laden, but continue "training and arming a hundred others" at the same time, he added. NATO's mission in Afghanistan resulted "in the creation of multibillion-dollar corruption schemes" and a surge in illegal drug production, Patrushev mentioned. And the US withdrawal from the country in 2019 was to a large degree about "focusing on Ukraine" and confrontation with Russia, he said.

The security official cited remarks made last month by US Secretary of State Antony Blinken, who admitted that, with the country's military presence in Afghanistan finally ended, the administration of President Joe Biden had more opportunities to funnel arms to Kiev.

Patrushev points out that, in the wider picture, the interests of the US as a nation state are subservient to the interests of transnational corporations, which ultimately dictate the policies of many governments. Those unaccountable forces have inherited the colonialist approach that allowed Western nations to become wealthy and powerful, but they are no longer vested in national interests, he said.

Russia “has no place” in their schemes, since it “irritates the handful of world masters because of its natural riches, vast territories, and smart, self-sufficient people who love their country, its traditions and history,” he added.

via RT

UPDATE:

There is no place for Russia in the West. ‘World rulers’ are annoyed by it with its rich resources, vast territory, and self-sufficient people;

We are not at war with Ukrainians, but neo-Nazi criminals will be punished;

Corporations are aimed at the consumer society, while Russia upholds a reasonable balance of spiritual and moral values;

All four murders of American presidents are connected to corporations; it is no coincidence that Americans believe that Republicans and Democrats are two sides of a coin;

The American budget for 2023 is proof of Washington’s plans to unleash new wars; out of a total of $1.7 trillion, more than $850 billion will go to defense, and $45 billion to the Ukrainian conflict.