

Updated: After Libya, Now African Energy Supplies to Europe are Blocked

Description

Who was there yelling about canceling Africa's debts and how bad and unnecessary it is?

Here is a plan to build a gas pipeline to the EU that would have provided 30 billion cubic meters of gas annually to the misfortune of Russia.

A good plan, but now unrealizable.

Conspiracy theory? Yes. Europe is the victim of a 30-year energy resource starvation plan. It started with the closure of German coal mines. Then the closure of the nuclear plants. Then the shut down of imports from Iran, followed by imports from Iraq. Venezuela was no longer available due to Europe's self-imposed embargo. Libya's gas and oil were shuttered for no apparent gain.

---

And then the Gazprom pipelines were blown up.

In the Eastern Mediterranean the large deposits of gas are inaccessible due to ongoing quarrels between Israel and its neighbors, followed up by a devastating quasi-civil war in Israel itself.

And let's not forget Ukraine. It has plenty of coal to supply Europe, but nothing is available on the market. No gas, no coal, no oil, no uranium from Ukraine. Not even lithium.

And now we have the oil and gas pipeline projects from Nigeria, going through Niger, rendered impossible. But that's nothing compared to the imminent termination of France's supply of nuclear energy – 40 percent of which was fueled by the uranium from Niger.

Europe is a dead man walking. Warmongering? But how do you build a war economy without energy resources?

Conspiracy theory? Yes. This is how Europe is being passed on in vassalage to Russia. At the end of the day, Europe has no choice but to starve or to accept Russia's suzerainty. And that's how Russia becomes a real rival to China. The white European man against the Chinaman.

But that's for the next generation.

Update:

USA vs France in Niger. France is trying to organize a military invasion of Niger, organizing a coalition for this, where the main role should be played by the army of France and the army of Nigeria.

But the United States is against France's military intervention in Niger. Because the US has an important military base in Niger [oh, really?!] and they don't want to risk it. And if the French nuclear power industry will have problems due to a change of government in Niger, then the United States will only benefit from this.

The United States offers France not military intervention, but simply to buy the new authorities.

Also against French intervention in Niger and is the EU. The Italian Defense Minister has already openly spoken out against intervention. The EU is afraid of the revival of the anti-colonial discourse of Africa against Europe.

So the military invasion and the war in Niger seems to be cancelled.

*****

It turns out that the leader of the coup in Niger is Orthodox Christian. General Abdurakhman Tchiani (sometimes read Chiani) converted to Christian Orthodoxy in the early 1980s under the influence of the singer Vasilyeva.

Vasilyeva's husband is the brother of the wife of the then, in the 1980s, USSR Ambassador to Niger.

General Tchiani has been Russia's man for a long time.

