

The Future of Ukraine

Description

Opinions may differ.

You know, the situation is very interesting.

From the Left point of view, it's a war against globalism; from the Right's it is a war of national liberation. But from what?

From the dictatorship of global capital. While it's a nationalist struggle, at the same time it can be a coalition of many nations against the global cabal.

Now, the question is not whether to support the right wing or the left wing, but globalism or national sovereignty.

So there are interesting paradoxes here, in which Ukrainian Nationalists are the last idiots.

In the name of Ukrainian Sovereignty they fight to become part of the American empire which means – to lose sovereignty. Becoming part of another big power is to lose sovereignty.... They should have said "Stop" last year and stayed neutral.

Now the choice is limited – they will be part of one of the two big empires, even though one of them offered neutrality and negotiations earlier.

And actually we're going back to the good old zones of influence, and currency zones.
