

500 Years of Western Hypocrisy Exposed

Description

Cameron wins the hypocrisy contest, blaming Iran for retaliation strikes on Israel

The British foreign secretary David Cameron, who served as the UK's prime minister from 2010 to 2016, continues to set records in hypocrisy. Pressed by the reporters to clarify his position on the conflict between Iran and Israel in the context of his hawkish stance on Ukraine, Cameron simply refused to face facts which did not fit his agenda.

Pressed on Monday on LBC radio to assess the deadly Israeli strike on April 1 against the Iranian consulate in Damascus, Cameron said: "It is a matter for Israel. We have not made a comment on it. Can I understand Israel's frustration with Iran? Yes. Absolutely I can. I am not getting into what Israel has or has not done."

Russia's envoy to the UN Vassily Nebenzya on the same day blasted the UK and the US for hypocrisy, putting part of the blame for Iran's attack on the failure of the UN Security Council to condemn by a consensus Israel's strike.

"If a Western diplomatic representation had been hit, you [the US, the UK and France] would have immediately rained down reprisals," Nebenzya said. "And you would have argued in this very chamber that you had the right to do it."

A few days ago, Cameron refused to condemn Ukrainian drone and missile strikes on Russian territory, even though the US officially urged Zelensky's regime not to hit the internationally-recognized Russian territory and spare oil facilities. But Cameron defended "Ukraine's right to hit Russian energy targets."

While British jet fighters actively participated in the defense of Israel's territory and Cameron called for "peace" there, for Ukraine he only had military solutions — more war, but without any risk for NATO troops. He said Ukrainians needed not Western pilots, but "more anti-aircraft systems to be given by us."
